

Group 3: Population Health Management

You need to determine which health problems or health promotion activities are needed in a designed community. What types of health problems or health promotion activities is the community having the most difficulty with managing. Discuss the use of the following client assessment questions based on the students' clinical experiences. To determine the type of health programs or strategies that the community is in most need of to improve the health of the population, have them address the following questions.

Client Assessment Questions

- What are the major health problems or health promotion issues in the community?
- What health programs are offered in the community?
- What are the high-intensity-resource-use populations in the community?
- Which groups in the community are at risk for less-than-desired outcomes?
- Which health problems or lack of health promotion activities create an at-risk population in terms of access, cost, and treatment needs for the community?

Organizational Assessment Questions

- What clinical and support services are needed?
- When and where are community services most appropriately provided?
- How should services be provided?
- Where are services best delivered?
- Who are the most appropriate providers?
- Where and by whom are services best managed?